

Who Buried You in Previous Life?

Hi everyone, this is Nancy. Today is May 1st. 2021. How are you doing! Today, I would like to share a classic love story in Buddhism with you. This story, I believe, may help you untie some knots, relieve some annoyances, and dispel some doubts. After the listening to the story, you may say, "Everything is just so right!"

Once there was a scholar. He and his fiancé had booked a day to get married. However, when that day came, his fiancé did not marry him, but someone else. The scholar was heartbroken and became sick in bed, dying. His family tried all means, but could not help him even a bit.

Right at that time, a travelling monk was passing by the place and learned about his situation. He decided to help him. The monk came to his bed and took out a mirror for the scholar to look at. In the mirror, there was a vast ocean. On the ocean beach, a woman was lying there, dead and naked. One person came by. He took a look at the woman, shook his head, then he walked away. Another person came by. When seeing the woman's body, he took off his clothes, covered the body, then left. The third person came. He also saw the woman. He did something else. He dug a hole, carefully buried the woman's body, and then he left.

Then the scene in the mirror changed. In the mirror, the scholar's fiancé was with her husband. The monk explained, "Did you see the female body on the beach? That was your fiancé's previous life. You were the second person who passed by and covered the body with clothes. This is why she was in love with you to repay you. However, now she is repaying the third person who buried her in that life, and that person is her husband now."

After listening to the monk's words, the scholar suddenly understood, and was relieved from all the pain. He sat up from the bed and recovered.

Amitabha! This is the story that I wanted to share with you. This story is not meant to make you wonder what is my relationship with my husband or wife, but to say that everything has a reason behind, and we ourselves incurred all the people around us and all the things that happened to us. Thank you everyone for being here watching this video. I will see you next time. Bye.
